What is Extended Enterprise Training?

Most businesses today function as an extended enterprise consisting of employees, partners, suppliers, distributors and even customers. An extended enterprise model can have a number of benefits, such as expanding the reach of your business in the market. To achieve success and competitive advantage with an extended enterprise, training and management has not only become a priority, it is a necessity.

Training all the members of your extended enterprise may seem like a complicated and difficult task. However, with the right learning management strategy, it is possible to reduce costs, grow profits, break through productivity ceilings, and increase employee and customer satisfaction throughout your extended enterprise.
Why Should You Train Your Customers & Partners?

INCREASE CUSTOMER LOYALTY

Closing the sale is only the beginning. Today’s customer has more choices than ever before, which means companies must focus on earning customer loyalty to maintain competitive advantage. As a result, smart companies are investing in providing an exceptional customer experience.

Training your customers and getting them up to speed with easy-to-follow training helps them find immediate value in your offerings, and makes them more likely to become loyal customers. In a survey by Training Industry, 93% of companies saw increased customer satisfaction and 88% reported increased customer retention as a result of customer training.

IMPROVE CHANNEL PERFORMANCE

Companies today must compete not only for the attention of prospective customers, but for the attention of channel partners as well. Your channel partners are faced with information overload everyday. Providing training to your channel helps you cut through the noise.

Training your resellers and partners on your new products as they’re launched accelerates your sales cycle so you see profits faster. Sales training also enables your extended sales force to be more knowledgeable about your product so they sell more successfully, and more often.

Giving employees on the front-lines access to the information they need when they need it makes supporting your products easier and more efficient. A knowledgeable support team not only saves costs, but provides a better customer experience which drives loyalty and profitability for your company.
Using an LMS for Extended Enterprise Training

A learning management system (LMS) provides valuable tools for your organization to deliver training to all the members of your extended enterprise while meeting business objectives.

Implementing an LMS for training your extended enterprise can help you achieve the following:
GREATER BRAND AWARENESS — keep your brand top of mind for your customers and partners with a branded learning portal and training materials

INCREASED REVENUE — sell your training and certification programs with an integrated LMS/eCommerce solution to drive revenue generation

REDUCED TRAINING COSTS — train your channel online to save costs associated with traditional, in-person training such as travel, venue and trainer fees

CUSTOMER LOYALTY — add real value to your customer experience with exceptional training – conveniently accessible 24/7 – and create customers for life

HIGHER SALES VOLUME — empower your external sales force with the critical knowledge they need to sell your products and close more deals

IMPROVED SUPPORT — reduce time to resolve issues by educating your extended support team with all the training they need easily accessible in one central location
